The Inner City Summit, held on 5 May 2007, was an initiative of the Johannesburg Development Agency to forge a concentrated focus on management, investment and re-development. The establishment of a city improvement district was identified as one of the strategies to be employed as a mechanism to make this part of the city safe, clean, friendly and accessible for residents, visitors and potential investors.

The Central Johannesburg Partnership (CJP) was established as a voluntary city improvement district in September 1996, the second improvement district to be established in Johannesburg. It was legislated in January 1997 and covers 25 city blocks (having expanded from its eight blocks at inception). It was legislated in January 2005. It consists of five areas, namely Fordsburg / Mayfair Improvement District, Newtown Management District, Braamfontein Management District, Newtown Cultural Precinct and Braamfontein Extension.

The Central Improvement District (CID) was established as a voluntary district in 1989 and was finally legislated in 2005. It consists of five areas, namely Newtown Management District, Newtown Cultural Precinct, Central Johannesburg Partnership, Braamfontein Management District and Newtown Cultural Precinct. The CID was established to make this part of the city safe, clean, friendly and accessible for residents, visitors and potential investors.
